Five Thousand Years of Myths and Legends
Come to Life on Stage!

“5,000 YEARS OF CHINESE MUSIC & DANCE IN ONE NIGHT”

— The New York Times

Take an Extraordinary Journey

The Shen Yun show moves quickly through dynasties and regions. Legends, myths, and heroes spring to life through classical Chinese dance. Ethnic and folk dances fill the stage with color and energy. The leaps and flips of Shen Yun’s aerial masters, thunderous battle drums, and singers’ soaring voices are all set to animated backdrops that transport you to another world.

A Difference You Can Feel

In ancient China, artists valued integrity, meditation, and a mindful lifestyle. They took to heart the belief that to create inspiring art there must first be inner beauty. Today, Shen Yun’s artists follow this noble tradition, incorporating study and meditation into their rigorous daily training. The result? A performance that moves audiences in beautiful and profound ways. This is the Shen Yun difference.

Perfect Harmony of East and West

From the moment the gong is struck to herald the beginning of the show, you know you are in for something musically memorable. The Shen Yun Orchestra masterfully blends two of the world’s greatest classical music traditions: Chinese and Western. Ancient Chinese instruments such as the soul-stirring erhu and the delicate pipa lead the melody on top of a full orchestra of Western strings, percussion, woodwinds, and brass. The Western orchestra with its energy and grandeur, and the Chinese instruments with their distinct tones and styles, create a dramatic new sound.

“It’s superb. I am going to mention it on the news, because I think it is a great performance and people should see it.”

Weymouth murder touches Mayor Walsh's personal life

Tragedy. The father of Boston mayor's girlfriend's daughter killed his own mother, then was shot dead by police.

The man believed to have fatally stabbed his mother in Weymouth early Monday before being killed by police was the father of Boston Mayor Martin J. Walsh's girlfriend's child.

Police responded to a Prospect Hill Drive home — located in a residential neighborhood on a peninsula near Upper Neck Cove — just after 1 a.m. to find Paul J. Campbell, 49, "in an agitated state, apparently armed with one or more knives," and his mother, Patricia Campbell, 72, was seen sprawled out on the steps leading to the home.

Two police officers opened fire on Paul J. Campbell after he became confrontational. Campbell was taken to South Shore Hospital where he was pronounced dead. His mother was pronounced dead at the scene, from what was initially believed to be stab wounds.

The cause and manner of death will be determined by the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner, according to the Norfolk County District Attorney's office.

Campbell is the father of Lauren Campbell, daughter of Walsh's longtime girlfriend, Lorrie Higgins. In a profile of Higgins published last March in The Boston Globe, Campbell was described as a childhood friend of actor Mark Wahlberg, "a dark-haired rowdy who gradually built up a rap sheet of low-level crimes."

Campbell served nine months in prison, but later went on to be an actor, appearing in small roles in two Wahlberg movies "The Fighter," "Ted," as well as in "American Hustle."

Higgins told the Globe that while Campbell was not involved in Lauren's upbringing, his parents were "very, very good to Lauren and me both."

Walsh released a statement through a spokeswoman Monday saying: "This is an extremely personal situation and I ask that Lorrie and Lauren's privacy be respected at this time. This is an ongoing investigation and it is not my place to speculate on why or how this happened. My focus right now is on my family, Lorrie and Lauren, and their well being."

Both Campbells were believed to live at the home where the confrontation took place, according to the DA's office.

The DA's office, along with state police and Weymouth detectives are continuing to investigate the incident.

The two officers who shot Campbell were also taken to the hospital for evaluation and are currently on administrative leave.

Hundreds marched in Boston Monday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Celebrating Martin Luther King, Jr.'s legacy. 'Everyone's just fighting for justice'

Forty-nine years after Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. led a landmark civil rights march from Selma, Alabama, to the state capital, Montgomery, hundreds of Bostonians made their own four-mile march to call for completing the civil rights crusade left unfinished by King's 1968 assassination.

The throngs chanted, "No justice, no peace, no racist police," as they approached Boston Common. Dozens of police lined the protest route. A single construction worker yelled at the crowd,

"Police lives matter too!" as it passed by City Hall Plaza.

"I haven't been out at the most recent protests, but this being Martin Luther King Jr. Day, it seemed like the perfect opportunity to add my voice to this movement," said Corie Osborn, a 30-year-old from Boston. "He said, 'The time's always right to do what's right.' So I'm here."

This march followed a protest last week by dozens of activists who snarled traffic during the morning commute on I-93.

Police report

Man killed in Fla. mall tried to shield woman

Police on Sunday identified a man shot to death at a Florida shopping mall on Saturday and said he was apparently trying to protect a woman who was wounded in the attack.

Leonardo Coppola, 36, died when a gunman went to a store at the Melbourne Square Mall intending to shoot the gunman's wife, the Melbourne Police Department said in statement.

Police could hear shots when they responded to a report of gunfire and inside the mall found Jose Garcia-Rodriguez, 57, of Palm Bay; his wife, Idanerys Garcia-Rodriguez, 33; and Coppola, who died from his wounds.

Jose Garcia-Rodriguez was killed by a self-inflicted wound and his wife, who appeared to be the target of the shooting, was in good condition, Melbourne Police Commander Vince Pryce told a news conference. REUTERS

Francis in the Philippines. Pope's penchant for straight talk tackles key church taboo.

Quoted

"Some think, excuse me if I use the word, that in order to be good Catholics, we have to be like rabbits — but no." Francis said, adding the Church promoted "responsible parenthood" his ease at using colloquialisms to make his point.

He mentioned a woman he recently met who already had seven children by cesarean section and put her own life at risk by becoming pregnant again. He said he chided her for "tempting God" and added: "That was an irresponsibility."

The leader of the 1.2-billion-strong Roman Catholic Church restated its ban on artificial birth control, adding there were "many ways that are allowed" to practice natural family planning.

The Church approves

of only natural methods of birth control, principally abstinence from sex during a woman's fertile period.

In Sri Lanka and the Philippines, Francis condemned what he called an "ideological colonization" attacking traditional family values.

On the plane, he indirectly criticized rich countries and international organizations he said tried to influence lifestyles and morals of young people in poorer nations, comparing their activity to that of 20th century Nazi and Fascist propagandists. REUTERS

U.S. aid worker Alan Gross, whose release from a Cuban prison helped pave the way toward restoring diplomatic ties with the communist nation, will be among the White House's top guests for Tuesday night's State of the Union address.

3 Money making habits to try now

There are some simple things you can do in your life to make this year your best yet. Here are my top three tips that are truly easy to pull off.

Tip #1: Wake up early

In major cities, nightlife goes on for all hours and even those who stay at home have tons of options to stimulate their brains for hours on end, making people choose to stay awake later. That means they wake up later too. Don't give into temptations. By going to bed earlier and rising earlier than your peers, you can get much more accomplished than them. Trust me: I've just begun focusing on this tip and the difference is night and day.

Tip #2: Read and take notes

I find that having a notepad with me — whether physical or on an electronic device — and taking meaningful notes based on what I'm reading fills me with new ideas and lessons that benefit my life in some surprising way. When you take notes just for your own benefit, you don't need to bother with spelling, grammar and punctuation; just jot down ideas and questions you have gathered from your reading. Look at those notes and ponder them later on — your brain will be happy.

Tip #3: Focus on long-term goals

This is the toughest of my three tips, but if you start out each morning by reciting one or two of your long-term goals and what you can do that day to get closer to achieving them, you put yourself on the best path to increasing your odds of long-term success and self-fulfillment.

Don't get nervous before the SAT

Crash course. Rest up this week, and keep calm when you get to the exam on Saturday.

For most students, taking the SAT for the first time represents the most important exam of their lives. With many high school juniors currently doing their last-minute prep before this Saturday's exam, it's important for them not to let their pretest jitters get out of control.

"We tell students this: 'You probably spent at least six weeks studying for the SAT, whether it was through a class or a tutor or a book, so remember to take a deep breath,'" says Rob Franek, the senior vice president of publishing at the Princeton Review. "Feel confident in the work you've done."

With Saturday's exam just around the corner, Franek urges students to keep the following in mind.

Taking your time and following directions is crucial. / ISTOCK

Change is coming

Heading into the unknown

Last winter, the College Board (which administers the SAT) made headlines when it announced drastic changes to the exam beginning in March 2016. Franek says he and his colleagues are already fielding questions. "We're advising people to take the current exam if they can," he says. "The restructured SAT is a tectonic shift and it creates a great deal of anxiety, but the old exam is a known quantity."

Practice self-care

It seems like common sense, but remember that staying up late every night leading up to the test won't put you in the best state of mind. "Make sure that you take care of yourself," Franek says. "Remember to sleep."

Read the directions

"It's so easy to get tripped up on the directions of the SAT because they are confusing," Franek says. Now is not the time to be careless. Take a second to make sure that you truly understand what the question is asking before selecting an answer.

Manage your time

"Focus on your pacing," he advises. "It's reminding yourself of how many minutes you have for each section. Start with the easy questions and remember the process of elimination — if you can eliminate two or three of them, it's OK to guess the answer."

It's also important not to spend too much time trying to figure out a particularly tricky problem.

"You can easily skip that question and go back to it at the end when you can focus," Franek advises.

Billy Crystal takes a stand against gay sex scenes

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Billy Crystal has a bone to pick with the shows that feature scenes of a homosexual nature, complaining to the Television Critics Association that they're not "to his taste," whatever that means. "Sometimes I think, 'Ah, that's too much for me.' Sometimes it's just pushing it a little too far for my taste — and I'm not going to reveal to you which ones they are." Sure, but we can guess. The biggest possible offenders are "How to Get Away with Murder" and "Looking." "I hope people don't abuse it and shove it in our face to the point where it feels like an everyday kind of thing," he added.

Listen, Billy, if you're going to employ neoconservative dog whistles in your responses, the correct phrasing is "shove it down our throats," not "shove it in our faces." I'm sure Fox News can provide you with a handy cheat sheet if that's what you need. And as far as gay scenes feeling like "an everyday kind of thing"? That's sort of the point.

Wait, Jennifer Aniston is Team Angelina?

Jennifer Aniston and Angelina Jolie both attended the Critics Choice Awards last week — in the same room and everything — and the world did not slip into biblical levels of chaos. In fact, Aniston even went on record about the "Unbroken" director. "I hope that's slowly coming to an end," Aniston told Entertainment Tonight. "[Unbroken] is so beautiful and wonderful, and she did such a gorgeous job, and I think it's time people stop with that petty B.S. and start celebrating great work and stop with the petty kind of silliness. ... It's just tiresome and old. It's like an old leather shoe."

I'm all for the high-minded moving on you suggest, but some — ahem — would be out of a job without all the petty B.S. and silliness in the world.

SATURDAY NIGHT LIVE / YOUTUBE

'SNL' takes a swing at Justin Bieber's Calvin Klein ads

"Saturday Night Live" star Kate McKinnon has spent the last couple of years honing a really impressive Justin Bieber impression, so it only made sense that when the show returned this weekend she would put it to use to lampoon the Canadian tiny titan's infamous Calvin Klein underwear and jeans ads. "Yo, my pee-pee's in there," McKinnon-as-Bieber brags, motioning to her underwear. What works best about the clip is that while it makes the obvious nod to his too-impressive-to-believe package, the brunt of its humor revolves around Bieber's attempts to seem like a grown-up, serious sex symbol — and how those attempts are completely undermined by his own immaturity.

Something 'Weird' is going on with Al

Exclusive. After more than three decades making fun of pop songs, the world was finally ready to give Yankovic a 'Mandatory' No. 1 album.

In a career that has spanned more than 30 years, "Weird Al" Yankovic is still experiencing a lot of firsts.

After rolling out a video per day on various online outlets to promote his "Mandatory Fun" album this summer, the world's most famous parody singer finally landed his first No. 1 record.

Each of the eight videos

he released were viral sensations, racking up more than 50 million views and giving him a ubiquity that he hasn't had since the 1980s. He's hoping the announcement of a world tour will have a similar impact.

"I always like to do the sneak attack," Yankovic says of the #8Days8Videos campaign and Tuesday's announcement of the Mandatory Tour, which includes a stop at the Governors Ball in June.

"Because it's comedy, surprise is a big component. It's better not to know the joke is coming," he says.

This comic consciousness is a big part of our exclusive conversation with Yankovic.

When discussing "Word Crimes," the "Blurred Lines" parody that has been viewed on YouTube more than 21 million times, he says, "If you're going to be angry about grammar mistakes, why not be extremely angry about them?"

And while Yankovic has said that "Mandatory Fun," which was nominated for a Grammy last month, may be his last conventional album, it doesn't mean he's retiring from making fun of hit songs. He just might do it in a more timely fashion, releasing singles instead. So what other firsts await him in his career?

"I've done a TV series and I've done a movie," he says, adding, "Someday I'd like to do a successful TV series and a successful movie! The one thing I'm sort of toying around with is doing a Broadway play. I won't say who I'm collaborating with or what we're thinking about, but that's something that's [in] my thoughts lately, and something that I haven't done. Other than that, I still enjoy my day job."

Screwing up

He isn't always in spoof mode

"I'm a big music fan, and that would just drive me crazy if I always had to have my antennae out," he says. "I certainly can listen to the radio, or listen to music in general, without always thinking, 'Hmmm, how can I screw this one up?'"

'Eat it'

Thanks to the King of Pop

"I have to give a large amount of credit to Michael Jackson for allowing me to do my parody of 'Beat It.' That turned a key in a major way. Any artists that we'd been talking to who were on the fence, we could say, 'Well, Michael Jackson didn't seem to have a problem with it...'"

According to a new study, music can help children feel less stressed. / ISTOCK

New study. Music therapy can help emotionally neglected children

In a small trial, music therapy had a positive effect on both verbal and nonverbal communication between emotionally neglected children and their parents. Parents participating in music therapy also perceived their children as being less stressed.

Music therapy generally involves the therapist, parent and child playing instruments together, listening to and discussing music or playing musical games. Stine Jacobsen, who led the study, and her team used interactive games in which parents and children took turns following and leading each other, while the therapist provided "a musical frame for the family to try and approach each other nonverbally through the music."

Jacobsen, who heads the music therapy program at Aalborg University, and her colleagues recruited 18 families with children ages 5 to 12 from a residential family care center that acts as an alternative to removing children from their parents' homes.

All of the families showed signs of emotional neglect, including social dysfunction or delayed emotional development.

Nine parent-child pairs received the center's usual treatment program, while the other nine received 6 to 10 music therapy sessions. After the series of sessions, parents involved in the music therapy found it easier to talk to and understand their children, as well as communicate nonverbally, than parents who did not receive music therapy.

Families can get some of the benefits without attending formal music therapy sessions, according to Williams. Shared music experiences, such as listening to music together, dancing and singing, are helpful for a child's development and likely good for parenting skills as well, she says.

Jacobsen recommends starting this musical bonding early. "Singing together or singing for your infant or toddler can be a very intimate bonding activity and comes naturally for some families. The earlier you start interacting nonverbally with your child in a meaningful way, the more you might see or feel the benefit." REUTERS

3 Parents helping change the world

Inspiring. These parents all made a big difference by starting small.

Parents are confronted with problems all day every day, and it's hard enough just to find solutions that help your kids. But for these three parents, the problems they faced made them pause and consider how many other kids might be facing a similar crisis. Let their stories serve as inspiration for how you can turn the negatives into positives in your own life.

Making doctor visits less scary

Every parent knows the anxiety of taking their child to the doctor for a shot. As a mom and pediatrician, Dr. Amy Baxter has been on both sides: giving the shots and watching her son squirm. Determined to make shots less of a big deal — and eliminate some of the pain — Baxter came up with a way to create what is essentially a vibrating ice-pack wrapped in a cute bee character. The idea is that it will interrupt pain signals on their way to the brain.

The National Institutes of Health was so impressed by Baxter's idea that she was awarded a $1 million grant. Now her company, Buzzy, has several offshoot products, all making getting a shot virtually pain-free.

Keeping military kids connected during deployment

One of the greatest sacrifices that the men and women fighting for our country make is being away from their families during long deployments. It's hard on the spouse left at home, and also for the soldier, who is missing out on his or her child's big milestones and the simple, everyday moments.

Marine wife Alia Reese knows this all too well, but she found a way to make deployment just a little bit easier for families. Reese published two books, "My Daddy Is a Marine" and "My Mommy Is a Marine," allowing families to include their own photos inside. Serving as a story/photo album, it's a small yet powerful way to keep families connected while separated.

Dad on a mission to give every hungry kid a good lunch

When Mark Alvarado's daughter asked him to pack an extra lunch for a classmate in need, it sparked a bigger action. He partnered with No Kid Hungry to throw events giving out free meals with a festival feel featuring live music. Last year, they served over 120,000 meals in their Santa Barbara community, where 21 percent of children live below the poverty line.

Letters to the editor

Viva la France

Re: Paris attacks

Paris, France was attacked last week by jihadists whose demented mentality had massacred many at the Charlie Hebdo satirical newspaper office. My heartfelt prayers go out to their families, friends as well as all the people in France who are mourning the loss of their fellow country men and women. Said and Cherif Kouachi went on a killing spree because they dislike what was said and depicted by this newspaper. I found this egregious and nefarious act of barbarism to be completely intolerable. I believe no man or woman has the right to kill another for what they say. I may not agree with what someone has to say but I will defend their right of free speech. These evil doers are home grown and come out of many different countries and train to kill. These people must be stopped or many more innocent men, women and children will surely die. All the religions of the world must stand up and shout in a loud voice and say, enough is enough we will stand no more, for we cannot take this anymore." Free speech must be defended at all costs' or will enter an era of despair and agony. When freedom dies man ceases to exist. As such, humanity must not appease nor capitulate to these perpetrators of evil who have no regard for the sacredness of human life. As for myself, I will not be afraid to speak out against those who commit these heinous acts of evil against innocent lives. For I have a voice and I intend to use it. In closing let me say to the people of France, we feel your pain.

NFL may throw the flag on Pats for flat football

NFL. The Patriots are again involved in scandal days before the Super Bowl.

Bill Belichick and his coaching staff were praised by many last week when they "out-smarted" the Ravens by using innovative formations. Still, in a post-Spygate day and age, anything and everything the Patriots seemingly do differently than other teams will be looked at with curious eyes.

The NFL is currently investigating whether or not the Patriots intentionally took air out of footballs during Sunday's rout of the Indianapolis Colts in the AFC Championship game. The theory is that footballs are easier to throw and catch in wet weather when they are not fully inflated.

"I think I've heard it all at this point," Brady told WEEI. "That's the last of my worries. I don't even respond to stuff like this."

In the NFL, game officials inspect 12 non-kicking footballs from each team prior to the game and mark them. The balls are maintained by ball attendants during the game but as the balls rotate in, officials continue to check them.

"If the ball doesn't feel perfect, they can throw it out," former NFL official Jim Dao-poulos told ESPN.com. "There is always the possibility that balls can lose air due to the conditions."

NFL Network said Monday that a ball was taken off the field and out of circulation midway through the AFC Championship game.

Bob Kravitz, of WTHR.com in Indianapolis, said he was told that "if a league investigation confirms deflated footballs it will result in lost draft picks."

Jets may be fined for Revis talk

Jets owner Woody Johnson could be fined a large sum as the NFL is trying to determine whether or not there was a violation of the league's tampering rules. Wilfork a good Samaritan

Patriots defensive lineman Vince Wilfork helped a 38-year-old Hanson, Massachusetts, woman out of her Jeep after the vehicle rolled onto its side on Route 1 near Gillette Stadium. At 12:45 a.m. Monday, just hours after the Patriots beat the Colts in the AFC title game in Foxboro, Wilfork reportedly reached into the vehicle and pulled out the woman with one hand while a state trooper held the driver's door open. B's look to finish first half strong

The Bruins (24-16-6) had won five games in a row before stumbling against the Blue Jackets, 3-1, last Saturday.
